

Jamie Cohen-Cole

Washington, DC

How Children Became Model Organisms for Scientific Thought

Constructivist Epistemology from the Sciences to the Humanities and Back Again

4.11.25

16:15h

eikones Forum
Rheinsprung 11
4051 Basel

Self-Control: Race, Gender, and Social Science, 1950–today is a new, SNF-funded research project at the University of Basel. The project traces how constructions of self-control have shaped understandings of racial and social inequality in the human sciences. Susanne Schmidt, Pokuaa Oduro-Bonsrah, and Antonia von Schöning will examine experiments, longitudinal studies, and cross-cultural investigations conducted in North America, the Caribbean, and East Africa. Their research will show how studies of self-regulation cast social, economic, and political issues in terms of behavioral competence.

Launch SNF-StG
“Self-Control: Race,
Gender, and Social Science, 1950–today”

In Kollaboration mit dem Kolloquium Geschichte des
19. bis 21. Jahrhunderts

eikones Forum
Rheinsprung 11
4051 Basel

Universität
Basel

Departement
Geschichte

eikones

4.11.25

16:15 h